Thursday Evening

Mommy my dear,

How I wish I could hire an aeroplane every afternoon between ~~two~~ and three o'clock, that would transport me down to you for my five minutes chat with you.

But one has to resign oneself to one's fate and I'm here so I suppose I shall stay and have to let my pen tell you every day that I love you and love you and love you.

Betty and Margaret and
- yes, Harold bade me farewell at the station.
Harold went over to Betty to get my suit case and I was glad - not only to see him but to have him carry my suit case, for it was rather heavy.

It is wet and snowy out doors so I am going to mail this downstairs instead of taking it out to the post box. That way it is posted three hours later.
I wonder if it will make any great difference; if not I think I'll do that during the cold months.

From your own little girl.
